❖ The Cry of the Dead Whale: Earth Day Installation

Name of Artist: Biboy Royong

Description: On 11 May 2017, a supposed 'dead whale' was seen on the shores of Naic, Cavite. It was in fact an art installation. What looked like a dead whale from afar was really made of plastic waste up close. The Philippines ranks third in the list of countries with the most plastic waste going into the oceans. To address the issue, and with a very limited budget, the strategy taken was a disruptive, monumental installation that effectively spread the message on the worsening case of plastic pollution. The large-scale sculpture was unveiled on the shores of one of the most polluted water bodies in the country — the Manila Bay. For the CCP's The Cry of the Dead Whale installation, a new element was added - a "dead baby whale" inside the belly of the dead whale. A representation of the millennials — the generation that will inherit the future of our oceans, it is both a statement and a question directed at the target audience.

No. of Audience/guests: 123 (including exhibit opening)/Exhibit Opening: Pasilyo V. Manansala

Description: An inventory of images that tell stories of corruption, territorial disputes, environmental plunder, deprivation of basic rights, and their consequences. The constructed landscape is an index of a particular social space as manufactured by feudalism, bureaucrat-capitalism and imperialism. It is a building-up of a map that delineates the local node of the global network of power and oppression that is capitalism at its latest stage.

❖ HANDS ON: Touch, Engage, Create (Association of Pinoyprintmakers (A/P))

No. of Audience/guests: 489

Description: In printmaking, interaction that make use of the senses other than sight are indicative of the process itself: touch is deployed to ascertain the surface of paper, one checks out the smell if the ink can still be used, one "listens" to how the ink sounds when applying with a brayer, thereby deciding if the thickness of the ink is appropriate enough. With the title Hands On: Touch, Engage, Create, the works here tell the viewer that tactility is not just a basic premise of creative generation, but a requirement of its "completion."
